

Corymbia eximia (Yellow Bloodwood) –

Is a medium sized tree, highly ornamental, especially when in flower, and is planted as a street or parkland tree. It deserves to be more widely used as it is attractive to flower feeding insects and birds. The adult leaves are somewhat thick and dull green to bluish green, and the bark, which is yellow to orange (sometimes yellow-grey) in colour, has a thinly flaky texture. Flowering generally occurs from September through to November.
